The home computers between 1977 and about 1990 were different from today's uniform and predictable machines. During this time it made economic sense for manufacturers to make microcomputers aimed at the home user. By simplifying the machines, and making use of household items such as television sets and cassette recorders instead of dedicated computer peripherals, the home computer allowed the ...

Lehigh Virus In November 1987, a virus was discovered infecting the COMMAND.COM file on DOS diskettes at Lehigh University. When an infected COMMAND.COM had infected four other copies of COMMAND.COM (i.e., when copying to a floppy diskette), the virus wrote over the file allocation table on all disks in the system, destroying the ability to read files from those disks.
